The First Reflection

A Free Starter Workbook from The Energy Mirror

By Amy Lyn Bassett · Merge2Worlds

A Note From Amy

Hello, love. I'm glad you're here.

If you found your way to this little workbook, there's a good chance you know the pattern: the man who is there but not there. The one whose words say one thing while something you can feel — but can't quite name — says another. You give, you wait, you hope, you try harder. And somehow, with the next man, it's the same weather in a different house.

I made this free starter workbook so you could taste the real thing underneath that pattern. It is not about what he says. It's about energy — his, and yours.

This is a beginning, not the whole journey. The full workbook, The Energy Mirror, walks all the way through it: where the blueprint was printed in childhood, the little girl in the mirror, shadow work, releasing what's stored in the emotional body, communication, intimacy, and a whole part written for extra-sensitive, neurodivergent women. This starter gives you the first reflection — and for some women, seeing the reflection clearly is the moment everything starts to change.

Take your time with it. Ten honest minutes is enough.

— Amy Lyn

The One Idea Everything Stands On

> The energy a man carries reflects back to you the energy you are carrying inside yourself.

That is not blame. It is a mirror — and a mirror is good news, because a mirror shows you exactly where your own healing is.

You cannot change his energy. You were never supposed to. But the moment your energy changes, the reflection changes — and a process like that, once it starts inside you, does not go backwards. You would not want it to.

How to use this starter

- Read it in order. It's short on purpose.
- Write by hand if you can. Energy moves when it gets out of your head and onto paper.
- There are no wrong answers. There is only what is true.
- Be gentle with the woman in the mirror. She got you this far.

Part 1 — Feel the Energy, Not the Words

Forget his words for a moment. Forget the texts, the promises, the late-night talks. Instead, remember what it feels like to be near him.

An emotionally unavailable man carries a particular energy — masculine energy that has gone into hiding or into armor. It usually feels like some mix of these:

- Present in body, absent in energy. He is in the room, but nobody is home.
- Walled. A thickness between you and him that you can feel but never get through.
- Withholding. Warmth in drops, never in a flow — just enough to keep you reaching.
- Taking without returning. Your energy flows toward him; his does not flow back.

You do not need him to confess any of this. Your body already knows it.

Exercise — Feel it, don't analyze it

Think of the man, or the pattern of men, and answer from your body, not your head:

1. When I am with him, my body feels:
   _____
2. When he pulls away, the feeling in me is: _____
3. If his energy were weather, it would be:
   _____

Sit with what you wrote. That weather is real information. It is the climate you have been living in.

Part 2 — The Other Side of the Mirror: You

A mirror needs two sides. His energy found a match in yours — not because you are broken, but because somewhere in you, that energy felt like home.

Here is the shape it usually takes:

- Your feminine energy is wide open and pouring out. Giving, soothing, understanding, fixing, waiting, hoping. The current runs strong — outward.
- Your masculine energy — the part of you that protects you, holds your boundaries, and chooses you — has gone quiet. Nobody inside is standing guard. So your open heart has no one watching the door.
- You lean. Your attention, your mood, your plans bend around his energy. When he is warm, you bloom. When he is cold, you shrink.

That is what self-abandonment actually is, underneath the behavior: your energy leaves you, and goes to live in him.

Exercise — The Lean

Answer honestly:

1. When he doesn't reach out, where does my energy go?
   _____
2. How much of my day is spent tuned to his mood, his distance, his next move? _____
3. If my energy had a guard at the door of my heart, what would that guard say? _____

The truth to hold onto: You do not attract unavailable men because your love is wrong. You attract them because your giving energy is strong and your guarding energy is asleep — and his closed energy fits into that open, unguarded space like it was made for it.

In the full workbook, we go find out where that fit was made. It was made early — and it can be unmade, with love and grace. First, let's give you two practices you can start today.

Practice 1 — The Pause

Your inner voice matters, because the way you talk to yourself is energy too. For many of us, that voice didn't start as ours — it's the voice we grew up hearing, and it can flare up as self-doubt, as "you're too much," or as an urge to explode.

The Pause is how you stop stuffing that voice down and start meeting it instead:

1. Stop. When the wave hits — doubt, shame, the urge to react — pause before you speak or act.
2. Breathe and step back inside yourself. Feel your feet. Feel your own energy come back into your own body.
3. Ask: Whose voice is this, really? Is this me, now — or is this an old echo?
4. Let it move. You don't have to fix the feeling. Reflecting on it, honestly, is what releases it.

Practice this once a day, on something small. You are teaching your energy a new home: yours.

Practice 2 — The Daily Balance Check

Your healing is a balancing act — feminine and masculine energy, within you. Giving and receiving. Softness and guard. Neither one is the enemy; the wound is when one runs the whole house.

Once a day, ask yourself these three questions:

1. Where did my energy go today? (Toward him? Toward everyone else? Any of it toward me?)
2. Did I receive anything today — or only give? A compliment, help, rest, kindness. Did I let it in?
3. What is one small way I choose myself tomorrow?

Write the answers down, even in a notes app. Small honesty, daily, is how the reflection changes.

Seven Honest Questions

Before you close this starter, sit with these. Don't rush them.

1. What do I believe about love — where did I learn it?
2. What did love look like in the house I grew up in?
3. When did I first learn to go quiet about what I need?
4. What do I keep giving that I am aching to receive?
5. What am I afraid will happen if I stop reaching?
6. If my daughter, or my best friend, were living this pattern — what would I tell her?
7. What would my life feel like if my energy lived in me first?

Whatever came up — tenderness, grief, a flash of anger, relief — that's the mirror doing its work. Nothing about what you feel is wrong.

Where to Go From Here

This starter showed you the mirror. The full journey goes deeper:

The Energy Mirror — the complete workbook ($49.99) All 15 parts: where the blueprint was printed, the beliefs underneath, the little girl in the mirror, your inner voice, the giving & receiving current, shadow work on the reflection, releasing stored energy from the emotional body with love and grace, communication, intimacy, choosing a different energy — plus a full part for extra-sensitive, neurodivergent women, whose energy bodies hold ancient wisdom and can tune in to Source energy. Includes the complete Reflection Worksheet, Release Practice, and a 4-week practice plan.

The Energy Mirror — live class ($144, workbook included) Four weeks together, live with me, walking the workbook part by part — for women who want to do this work in sisterhood, not alone.

Both live at merge2worlds.com.

And if all you ever do is this free starter — do the Pause, do the Balance Check, and remember what the mirror showed you. That alone is a beginning. Your energy belongs to you, love. It always did.

— Amy Lyn Merge2Worlds · Daughter of Soul Reconciliation

© Amy Lyn Bassett · Merge2Worlds. This free starter workbook may be shared freely, whole and unaltered, with credit. The complete workbook, The Energy Mirror, is available at merge2worlds.com.